into her seat, but when she looked around, she saw that the plane had been cut in two. There was a lot of wreckage and parts of the plane laying all around her, but where were all the other passengers? Where was the pilot? As she tried to get up, Zoreka discovered that her arm had been badly injured in the crash.

She searched all around the wreckage of the plane, but could not find anyone else. It was very, very strange. Why was she left behind? How long had she been out? Was she the only survivor? She knew she couldn't stay there, so she started walking through the jungle to find help.

Luckily, Zoreka's parents had taught her about the various plants and animals of South American jungles. She knew what she could eat and what was poisonous. She also knew how to stay away from certain animals, bugs and reptiles. If she had not known this, she could have been poisoned or killed within a couple of days.

As it was, she walked through the jungle for seven days, eating berries and roots to stay alive. Her arm hurt a lot, and she was bitten by many exotic bugs. One particular bite caused a major reaction. Zoreka had night sweats, day sweats and felt dizzy and sick to her stomach. There was no way she could make herself feel better, no matter how hard she tried.

After seven days of walking and suffering, Zoreka came to a big river. She followed it downstream for a day and finally came across a camp. Soon, some men who worked in the jungle came along and offered to help her get to a nearby village. They took her to the hospital, where her parents came and stayed with her till she got better. It took a while, but Zoreka finally recovered from this horrible experience. She was happy to be back with her family, but looked forward to going back to Canada to finish high school. After graduation, she wanted to study to become a scientist like her parents.
